

Real Railroad Snowplow Gets Stuck

There's too much seriousness around here. Maybe before we get full-on spring weather, it is time for a little wintertime fun. March is the snowiest month in South Dakota. While this video is shot in Kansas, it is awesome to see what mother nature does to seemingly huge and invincible human made machines.

Here's 9,000 original EMD horsepower being brought to its knees by water molecules arranged in a certain way as to stop a plow train in its tracks.

Anybody want to take a shot at modeling this?
